HOW TO USE THIS BOOK

A vampire lounges in an opulent office high above the city. A werewolf hunts in the streets. Ancient evils lurk in the shadows of alleyways. Pixies flit about the flowers of a rooftop garden. The old dragon sleeps on his hoard in a bank vault.

The Book of Random Tables: Urban Fantasy is a supplemental resource for tabletop role-playing games set in modern and magical worlds. It is system-agnostic, so it is compatible with any RPG rule system. All you need are two 10-sided dice to roll on the D100 tables.

Game masters can use these tables in various ways. They can use them during session prep, roll on them, pick results, or have their players roll. No matter how they are used, they help game masters cut down on session prep and provide creative story options.

The random tables are organized into five sections. Here's the breakdown:

The first section is Items & Things. Empty rooms are boring, and these tables solve that problem. GMs will find tables like Items in a Bookshop Owner's Office, Items in a Corporate Vampire's Office, Items in a Dilapidated Movie Theater, Items in a Hackers' Den, Items in a Witch's Apothecary, Items in an Arcane Arts Professor's Office, and Items in Catacombs.

The Locations section is next. Urban fantasy would be incomplete without old bookshops, so the Mystic Bookshops table provides one hundred. The Underground Clubs table grants one hundred places where vampires, werewolves, elves, and other fantasy characters can congregate.

Non-player characters are an essential part of tabletop RPGs. The NPCs section contains six hundred different non-player characters that can be used to enrich RPG campaigns and sessions. Names, occupations, personalities, and secrets are given for each.

The GM's bane is trying to come up with names on the fly. The Names section has six hundred old or mysterious-sounding female, male, and surnames. Also included are one hundred book titles that combine technology and magic.

The Encounters section has three D100 tables: Alleyway Encounters, Dragon Bank Encounters, and Rooftop Garden Encounters. All the seedy business of the city is conducted in alleyways, and fae-infused modern cities are no different. Who else would own a bank other than a dragon? Rooftop gardens are where old magic interacts with the new.

With these random tables, game masters can take their campaigns and sessions in new and exciting directions while filling rooms and locations with unique items. Adventure awaits, so don't linger. The shadows nearby may be alive.
